PREFACE

Footnotes and postscripts have become the privilege of editors and authors through the foresight of those past generations which, like our own, have always found the need for explanation. And a similar privilege which belongs to the fair sex is theirs through . . . well, like all other of their happy acquisitions, they exist and are greatly admired. Essence of thought is usually contained in those few sentences which follow a signature, be it destined for one lady from another. The dissimilarity of an editor's postscript with that of a lady's lies in the truth that the former is more often ignored, while the latter, in most cases, is devoured. No mean skill was displayed by those venerable forefathers of ours when they forestalled the tendency of their kind to throw a book down before the end was reached. Following their noble example this volume is prefaced in lieu of the less promising postscript.

There is nought between the covers of "The China Who's Who" that the compiler has evolved through that specious and precious gift, imagination. He feels, therefore, that all discrepancies and extravagances, if these exist other than such as can be laid at the door of technical and editorial error, must find their way to the heads of those whose kindness has made this first issue of the work possible. In poker parlance . . . "the buck is passed," not to return evil for good, but to arrive at those factors which require explanation.

When this work was first contemplated grave doubts fought with optimism for premier influence. The trouble that most humans experience in overriding scruples of modesty was recognized as a formidable opponent to a satisfactory surrender of personal information. Optimism prevailed, and more than twelve hundred sojourners in China have recognized a duty to posterity where no doubt powerful qualms did their utmost to dissuade. With but five exceptions responses have been full and generous. Feelings with one individual ran so high that a curt note demanding complete omission of his name followed upon the request for particulars of his career. Another made sarcastic comment and expressed the desire to be informed as to what was behind the deep laid scheme that might inveigle him. Yet another considered the circular a personal insult and was only appeased after being convinced that to purposely precipitate an insult upon a few thousand foreigners in China would have been the deed of a madman. The two remaining dissentients complied with the request made to them only because of the stamped envelopes for return, making it plain that no obligation whatsoever was incurred in so doing. The prospect of placing recipients under obligation can appeal only where goodwill is not more desirable than pecuniary benefit.

In this first issue of "The China Who's Who" there are, perforce, omissions through absences on leave, sickness, incredulity and other causes which time will, it is hoped, remedy. The co-operation of all who have found, and who should find, a place in its leaves is requested, not only for the purpose of making future editions more efficacious and valuable, but also in order that the activities of the foreigner in China may be adequately accompanied by an explanatory record of his past and present. Interest in a building is always enhanced by a degree of familiarity with the builder, and with the architect. If the building the foreigner is erecting in China is to be a grotesque one there is reason for learning of his qualifications as there is if perfection is to grace his effort. In the foundation stage of erection it must be said that there is evidence of skill and sincerity of interest; likewise of self-interest. A harmonious blending of the two would seem to form the state best leading to success. And a brief inspection of the pages which follow inspires the belief that, as the building grows, will it stand the test of time. The future alone can confirm.

To the scoffers of "The China Who's Who" (and the World would not be safe were there none), the compiler presents his compliments and hopes that at not too distant a date they may become supporters. To those who think well of it he extends his thanks, the encouragement thus accorded guaranteeing as pleasant a task in the compilation of the 1923 issue (if Dame Fortune permits of such a pleasure) as that which has accompanied the work of this publication.

And finally, to those who have made this book possible the wish is expressed that they may not regret their generosity, now gratefully acknowledged, and that the future will find them equally unprejudiced. If desire and effort lend themselves to forming a work which is pleasing, then, in these respects, they may rest assured.

Barnet, M. J. A.,

(Peking), Minister for Cuba; First commenced his services as Vice-Consul to the Cuban Legation at Paris on the 4th March 1903; Obtained his first promotion as Consul of the 2nd Class in the same City on February 10th, 1904, remaining attached to the same Legation. Promoted Consul of the 1st Class on the 2nd July, 1906, but at that time the Consulate was apart from the Legation, being situated in the most commercial quarter of Paris. Promoted Consul-General 17th August, 1908, at Liverpool; subsequently transferred to Rotterdam on the 24th July, 1909, afterwards functioning at Hamburg from the 25th June, 1913. Whilst at Hamburg the Republic of Cuba declared war on Germany. In September 1915, returned to Cuba on furlough after 13 years' absence. Then joined the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Havana. In July 1916, he left for Hamburg to take up his late post. He represented Cuban interests in this town until April 1917 when he handed over Cuban interests to the Spanish Consul-General, office of Consular-General of Spain. For three weeks, M. Barnett with his family and other Cuban officials were taken to Berlin as hostages. Eventually he went to Switzerland, where, through the decision of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, he was sent to the Cuban Legation at Paris to lend his services there. The manner in which he fulfilled his mission was highly appreciated at this time of the world war and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in order to reward him for such services, nominated him as Charge d'Affairs at la Paz, Republic of Bolivia on 28th February 1918. But this post he did not take up, the Government having a little while later nominated him as Introduteur des Ministres ad-interim (1st June—2nd November 1919). Greeted the Uruguayan mission at Havana on its arrival and also that of the British Embassy. Was made Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for the Republic of Cuba in China on the 25th July, 1918, and he took up his duties at Peking on the 13th April, 1919. Is one of the oldest of the Cuban Diplomatic Body with 19 years' service to his credit. Decorations—Grand Croix de l'Ordee Chinoise l'Epée d'or; Grand Croix du l'ordre Croix Rouge Cubaine.

TO those who have not filled in the circulars sent to them for the 1922 issue of the "China Who's Who" through absence from China or other reasons, and to new comers whose occupation in China and past activities elsewhere makes of them such as should find a place in the 1923 issue of the book,

THE COMPILER AND PUBLISHER would be pleased to hear from and suggests that information be sent to him that is similar in form to what is printed herein. Their names will thus appear in the 1923 edition.
